

At Griffiths Law, the First Priority is Protecting Your Future

“Nearly every case I deal with is difficult and emotional, with one spouse or the other at a disadvantage,” says Suzanne Griffiths, Managing Shareholder, CFO, and Co-founder of the Denver-area law firm that bears her name, Griffiths Law PC. “Frequently, my clients have challenges regarding access to finances; divorce can sometimes lead to bad behavior. Fear of losing what they’ve worked for all their lives sometimes drives people to hide assets.”

“In other cases, clients may be disadvantaged in terms of child custody and parenting time. This is especially true for breadwinners who have spent less time with their children because of their demanding careers.”

Griffiths, who works exclusively in family law, seeks to empower her clients and help each to secure the assets and rights to which they are entitled.

Award-Winning Team

Griffiths Law is built on a foundation of excellence and experience. Griffiths was named a 2016 Lawyer of the Year by Law Week Colorado, a 2018 Top Lawyer by 5280 Magazine, and is included in the Super Lawyers® 2018 list of Top 50 Women Lawyers in Colorado. She can also lay claim—along with many of her coworkers and the firm itself—to dozens of additional honors and distinctions, including Best Lawyers in America. She has created, for herself, a niche in the area of high-profile divorce cases, the type that involve such assets as family trusts, restricted stock, complex business components, offshore accounts, and hidden assets.

“We have an unrivaled, collaborative team of attorneys, each possessing different skill sets,” Griffiths says. “We are forward thinkers

The attorneys of Griffiths Law PC excel in family law (divorce, custody, child support, property division, nontraditional families, modification and enforcement, maintenance and alimony, and grandparents’ rights) but also in civil litigation.

Civil practice areas include business and commercial litigation; construction defects; insurance, real estate, and partnership disputes; and domestic and intentional torts.

who excel at innovating and thinking outside of the box to deliver the best possible outcomes in our clients’ cases.”

And while Griffiths describes herself as a meticulous investigator, the firm’s top-notch outside resources include a select group of forensic accountants, appraisers, and mental health professionals, all of whom may be called upon to aid in identifying, valuing, and disentangling complex marital assets and parenting disputes.

Case Outcomes

Typically, as many as 90 percent of the firm’s divorce cases are settled out of court, some through collaborative resolution, a non-adversarial approach in which parties, together with their attorneys, work to arrive at a settlement that is fair for all. Mediation is a similar process that involves the help of an impartial, third-party mediator.

“For me, a successful outcome is one that is fair for all,” Griffiths explains. “Every party in a divorce, however, will experience some degree of loss; no one comes out whole, and it’s highly unlikely that anyone will receive all that they seek.”

Negotiated settlements are preferable to litigation, which is expensive, time-consuming, and unpredictable. But should it become necessary to litigate, Griffiths and the attorneys at Griffiths Law are well experienced in all phases.

“We excel when it comes to protecting those things that are most important to our clients—their financial well-being, their children, and their peace of mind,” says Griffiths. “We know what battles to fight and what to let go, when to put our foot on the accelerator and when to hit the brake. We ensure that all our clients have a level of support and representation that is unparalleled.”

Suzanne Griffiths is a crusader for the underdog, representing clients in highly complicated divorce cases.
